Abstract

In a Gallup poll organized in 1975, in the United States of America, 73 percent of the respondents said they were ready to vote for a woman candidate for the presidency. In another poll arranged by the same group, 70 percent preferred to see a larger number of women in government positions because "experience has shown that they are more patient than men, more versed in economy and less corruptible.

Keywords

Political women; Politics

Full Text: PDF

DOI: 10.32380/alrj.v0i0.1048

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Rose Ghurayyib

JOURNAL CONTENT

Search

Search Scope

All

Search

BROWSE

By Issue

By Author

By Title

KEYWORDS

Arab women
Arab world
CEDAW
Disabled women
Discrimination against women
Education
Egypt
Feminism
Human rights
Jordan
Lebanese women
Lebanon
Media
Morocco
Violence against women
War
Should women participate in active politics or not? The question above has over the years been a very common debate topic. Below are the arguments for and against women in politics. Arguments for the participation of women in politics. One of the biggest arguments for the participation of women in active politics is that women are less corrupt than men. Generally women are known to be less corrupt than men. Women throughout history have made an impact and have had a significant role in the society of their time. These women from the beginning of time have led us to the roles of women in our society today. They have boosted the standing of women in society and have tried to be individuals. In some time periods, women were controlled completely by men and in others they were moderately controlled by men.